Alexandra Slava (b. Kiev, Ukraine) is a figurative sculptor, art teacher and founder of the Berlin Sculpture Atelier - the art space that serves her private studio, gallery and learning center for traditional figurative sculpture.

Since Alexandra's graduation from The Florence Academy of Art in 2017, she has been running an independent artistic practice in Italy, Poland and Germany. Her teaching experience includes the conduct of numerous sculpture workshops and private lessons for learners with various backgrounds and creative goals.

Art works: how sculpting can boost employee wellbeing & productivity

As the global pandemic and rapid digital transformation changes our working lives, it is particularly important to support the mental health, sense of community and motivation amid the workforce members.

Art practices, and in particular creating with clay, have long been proven to show a positive therapeutic impact on human wellbeing by reducing stress and anxiety levels while increasing attention span, focus and problem solving abilities. As a consequence, the employees may demonstrate an increased performance and productivity at the workplace.

Sculpting is an engrossing process that intertwines craftsmanship and creativity, thus inducing the flow state which is of great benefit to the work efficiency of a corporate team and satisfaction of each of its members.

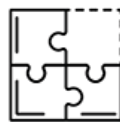

The creative art events are an excellent way to boost the team spirit by bringing the employees together outside of the busy working environment and engaging them in memorable shared activities.

For businesses related to visual arts and design, the sculpture workshops are perfect as educational exercises to enhance the skill set and refresh the creative workflow of staff members. The topics covered in the training programs include traditional modeling techniques, direct observation methods, anatomy and structure of the human body and advanced principles of composition.

The Berlin Sculpture Atelier will gladly tailor the workshop to meet the particular requirements of your company and provide an unforgettable creative experience.
